Noteable Events in the Past 24 Hours

More than 3.4 million Americans are temporarily skipping their mortgage payments because they lost income during the COVID-19 pandemic. Many mortgage companies are asking borrowers to make balloon payments, meaning they would have to pay all the money for the skipped payments in a lump sum at the end of the forgiveness period.

JetBlue will be the first airline to require passengers to wear face masks while on flights. The policy change comes after the company announced all crew must wear face masks. Similarly, American Airlines said they would provide face masks for all passengers, but stopped short of requiring passengers to wear them.

Quest Diagnostics announced that customers can now skip visits to the doctor's office and request COVID-19 antibody tests online. The test, priced at $119, will be able to tell individuals if they have had the virus, and if they may have some level of immunity to future infection. Health officials have warned that having antibodies present in the body may not guarantee immunity.

House leaders announced they have reversed plans to return to Congress for in-person sessions, citing concerns about potential exposure to COVID-19. House Majority Leader, Steny Hoyer (D-MD) said that the House's physician warned that returning to Capitol Hill now would present a substantial risk to lawmakers. The Senate is still planning on reconvening next Monday according to Senate Majority Leader, Mitch McConnell.

U.S. COVID-19 fatality rates are increasing even though case totals are flattening due to a lag between initial diagnosis and death. Officials speculate that the wave of people dying now were likely infected between three and five weeks ago. The number of deaths will likely not decline until three to four weeks after the total number of cases diagnosed on a daily basis begins to decline.

Yoshiro Mori, president of the Tokyo Games, said the Olympics could possibly be cancelled if the pandemic is not brought under control by next year. The games have already been postponed until July 2021 as a result of the pandemic. Olympic officials have said no additional postponement of the games is possible.

Digital Exploitation

Australia's Ambassador for Cyber Affairs, Dr Tobias Feakin has called for an end to attacks on medical facilities, such as the recent cyber attack on one of the Czech Republic's biggest COVID-19 testing laboratories. He stated to ZDNet that "[w]e call on all countries to cease immediately any cyber activity inconsistent with their international commitments."

The cyberattackers behind the Shade ransomware (Troldeh) have shut down their operations, released over 750,000 decryption keys, and apologized for the harm they caused their victims, according to BleepingComputer. Shade Ransomware has been in operation since 2014 and predominantly targets people in Russia and Ukraine.

Some Sophos firewall products were attacked with a new Trojan malware, dubbed Asnarök, to steal usernames and hashed passwords, according to BleepingComputer. The malware exploits a zero-day SQL injection vulnerability that can lead to remote code execution on any unpatched physical and virtual firewalls it targets.

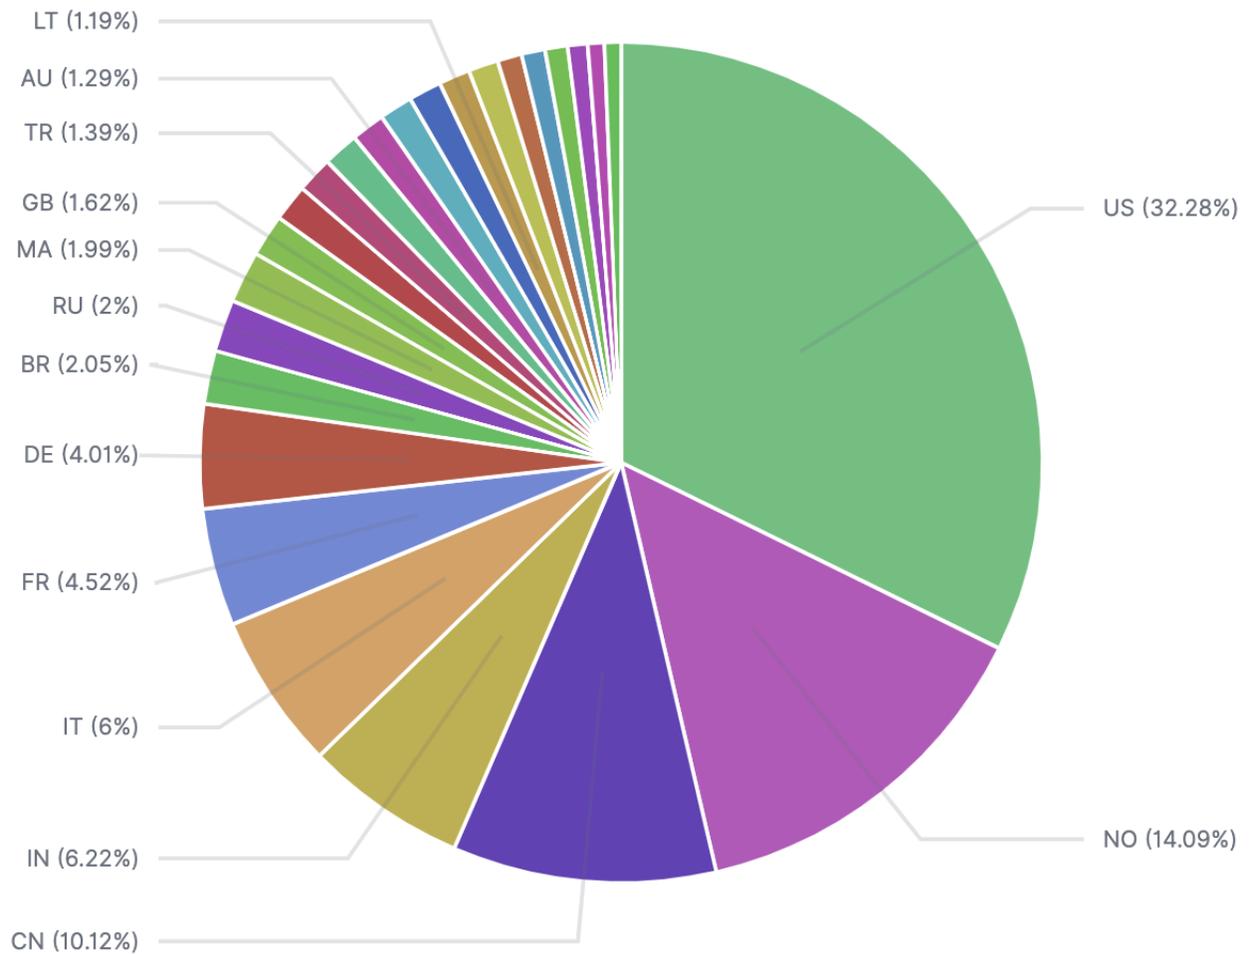

Zoom users are being targeted with a new phishing campaign that uses fake Zoom meeting notifications to threaten those who work in corporate environments that their contracts will either be suspended or terminated. When users click on the link they are redirected to a phishing landing page that mimics a Zoom sign-in page and scammers are able to steal the victims credentials.

Cybercriminals are creating new scams using COVID-19 delivery issues as a lure to get people to visit malicious links or open malware, according to BleepingComputer. In one example, the scammer sends an email that pretends to be from FedEx stating that due to the Coronavirus "lock-down," a package is being held at the warehouse. They then prompt the user to click on a phishing link to reschedule for pick up.

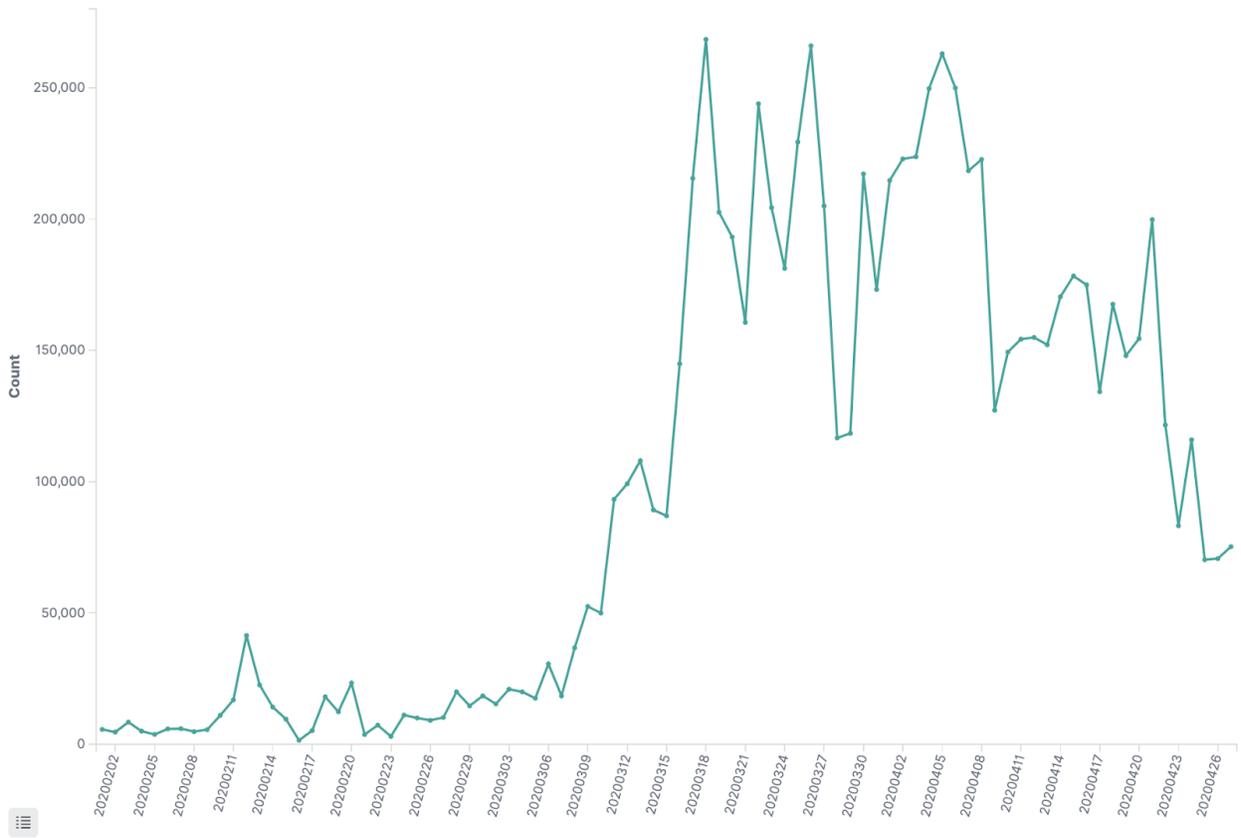

A few new COVID-19 related scams in the underground web marketplace include scammers offering an Israel-created 'vaccine' for $99. Another scammer posted a malicious MP3 file and informed users they needed to listen to it 3-6 times per day to eliminate COVID-19, according to Tripwire. Related, the United Kingdom's National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) reportedly took down over 2,000 COVID-19 ploys in March, including 471 fake online shops, according to the BBC.
